CAVES DWELLINGS

Bhalil village, in the Middle Atlas Mountains of Morocco, is famous for its troglodyte dwellings. It is said that there are 600 caves in the historic part of the village, some of which have been specially converted into tourist accommodation.

ACCOMMODATION

The troglodyte dwellings are carved into the cliffside and are decorated in traditional style with objects from past times and textiles in vibrant colours. Entering the caves, with their cool temperatures, feels like entering another world. (Food and drink are available in some caves.)

CATERING

Some caves have been turned from stables into restaurants, and so gain a new lease of life. Mangers have been transformed into benches where you can sit down to a convivial meal of tagine or couscous.

AUTHENTICITY

Some caves have not been converted and remain in their original state. They bear witness to the living conditions of their former inhabitants, offering a journey into a prehistoric past.

CURIOSITY

To the east of the village of Bhalil, you suddenly come across some curious abandoned caves. Carved into the travertine rock, they have a mysterious air about them. Known as "Kaf Trab", these quarries played a role in the construction of Bhalil.
